Foreword

The Hine Bibliography of Resources on Servant-Leadership, last published in 2008, has been revised and expanded significantly. New material since the 2008 edition is marked with an *..  Editor, Betsy Hine, is being joined by Valentine Muyumba, Head of Technical Services at Indiana State University to finish this big job which includes updating the print monographs, updating the non-print monographs (media such as DVDs, CDs, etc.), updating the theses and dissertations, adding journal and periodical articles and adding chapters in books. We wanted to make this revised and expanded edition as complete as possible but it’s likely that we have omitted some publications. Since this is now an electronic publication it is a dynamic document and will continue to be updated regularly. If you have published or have seen published any new books, media, articles or chapters in books, or if you have completed a master’s thesis or doctoral dissertation, please let us know right away via email at the following:

For books: Betsy.Hine@indstate.edu

For articles, media, chapters in books or theses and dissertations: Valentine.Muyumba@indstate.edu

We may already know about your contribution to the literature but don’t assume we do! Please let us know the citation in APA format that includes complete pagination, ISBN and whether it has a bibliography or references or index, glossary, etc., and whether it is also available as an e-book. In this greatly expanded edition we may not be able to provide annotations for everything as we did in the previous editions, but if you would also like to include a very brief synopsis we will try to include it.

Remember that, while there can be several interpretations of servant leadership, the scope of the bibliography is Robert K. Greenleaf’s Servant-Leadership. We look forward to hearing from you all in the near future as we’re hoping to keep this bibliography up to date electronically as we learn of new material.

The authors discuss the secrets of leadership through the story of a new team leader as she is mentored by someone who leads through service.

The author’s premise is that individuals who see themselves as stewards choose responsibility over entitlement and hold themselves accountable to those over whom they exercise power. References Greenleaf in the chapter that says "stewardship asks us to serve our organizations and be accountable to them without caretaking and without taking control." Includes bibliographical references and index.

The author comes from the premise that transformation comes from pursuing profound questions more than from seeking practical answers. Rather than asking "how" organizations should be focusing on purpose and acting on what matters. This book could be a continuation of the exploration of a "theology of institutions" written about by Greenleaf. Includes bibliography and index.

The author, founder of the Vanguard Group of Investment Companies, presents a guide, offering strategies for developing a diversified portfolio and avoiding investment pitfalls. Of note are his "caveat emptors" throughout (indexed) and his "twelve pillars of wisdom" as an epilogue. Includes bibliographical references and index.

Cover titled Bell Humanities Program, this volume is an account and appraisal of Bell System efforts to identify and develop leadership potential in its middle and upper level manager groups from 1952 to 1970. Several programs were designed and conducted which emphasized the study of the humanities and they were an historically unique collaborative effort by faculty members in selected colleges and staff members of AT&T.

The author's premise is that society needs to get back to basics regarding spirituality and he discusses the William Penn's "holy experiment" of the late 1600s, a radical society which was a prelude to the founding fathers' ideals of the US in the mid 1700s. He draws heavily on the Quaker traditions through time including the Quaker influence on Greenleaf's servant-leader work and writings. The first part is a history of Penn and his holy experiment ending with a chapter on "Philadelphia, Pennsylvania and Quakerism Today." The second part focuses on "a holy experiment, phase II" or the need for a resurrection of that spirit of the colonial times, a back to basics of that spiritually. In this part he discusses being of service and of visionary leadership which is where Greenleaf and servant-leadership is the focus. The epilogue calls for a new precedent, one made at the core of society. Includes bibliography and index.

The author uses the image of a jazz band to discuss leadership. The leader must find the music, the right musicians and perform in public. The effect of the performance depends on the environment, the players in the band, the need for everyone to perform as individuals and as a group, the absolute dependence of the leader on the members of the band, and the need for the followers to play well. A real analogy of an organization that is a true expression of servant-leadership.

Addresses volunteers who work for not-for-profit agencies and organizations through realized potential but also relates that potential to leadership in for-profit organizations as well. Any organization of realized potential opens itself to change, contrary opinion, the mystery of potential, involvement and to unsettling ideas; it is a place where people learn and grow.

This book notes the marks of an effective board, describes the proper work of boards, gives choices for structuring a nonprofit board, and covers the roles and relationships of board chairs, trustees and presidents. Could be used for board orientation and education.

Study guide for use with Servant as leader, Institution as servant and Trustees as servants by Robert K. Greenleaf. It is part of a reading and dialogue kit for use by a group of individuals who want to come together to study and learn about servant-leadership. Includes bibliography and pages for journaling.

Much of the caring for persons in today's society is mediated by large, complex institutions. This second of Greenleaf’s original 4 essays challenges conventional wisdom about hierarchical organizations and the use of power in our major institutions, including universities and churches. Greenleaf offers a concrete alternative in the "first among equals" model of organization. This essay has been translated into Spanish.

Essays and articles written, or talks given, over 20 years by Greenleaf. The first three chapters are the three essays: The servant as leader; The institution as servant; and Trustees as servants. The rest of the chapters are entitled: Servant leadership in business; Servant leadership in education; Servant leadership in foundations; Servant leadership in churches; Servant leaders: Abraham Joshua Heschel and Donald John Cowling; Servant responsibility in a bureaucratic society; and American and world leadership. The last chapter is an essay around Robert Frost's poem Directive, written in tribute to the poet after his death in 1963. Includes index.

A collection of essays by Greenleaf including his own answer to why serve? The first essay, The servant as leader, was originally written in 1969 out of concern for the seemingly devoid of hope attitudes by students at that time. The institution as servant was based on the premise that the late 20th century would be seen as revolutionary because of the number of influential persons who have seriously come to grips with issues of power and authority. The meaning of trusteeship and the functions of trustees are the concerns of the third chapter, Trustees as servants. A concluding postscript, Note on a strategy for change was written out of Greenleaf's experience with boards of directors and trustees grappling with ideas such as the ones found in the essays of chapters two and three.

A student's journal in which he recounts his adventure into learning to be a servant leader in a world confused about the authentic sources of and uses of power. The students live in Jefferson House under the Housemaster Mr. Billings who served as the model for the servant-leader. The influences and lessons learned during this time in university served to mold the student into a servant leader in his own career.

Reprinted from v. XIV, no. 3 (Nov. 1978) Humanitas: Journal of the Institute of Man, Dusquesne University, Pittsburg, Pa. This essay suggests why the institutions of our day, and our society in general, are all suffering from a leadership crisis. Greenleaf suggests a solution to the dilemma by defining three kinds of power, coercive, manipulative and persuasive, and their uses and limitations.

The author traces the influence of E. B. White on his thinking over a period of fifty-five years. He concludes that two of White's abilities, "seeing things whole" and "the gift of language to express what he saw," were key to his power as a writer.

Originally "A talk before the faculty and students of Barnard College at their fifth biennial vocational conference, November 30, 1960." The author explores the meaning of maturity as a life-long journey of developing one's own unique potential into personal significance and character.

"A talk by Robert K. Greenleaf to freshmen at Ohio University, Athens, Ohio, April 19, 1967, on Opportunity in the Next Three Years." Some seminal ideas found later in his essays. Discusses the individual's responsibility for growth and constructive influence; an opportunity to build a new ethic challenges those who seek to reach their potential in serving the public interest.

Seminaries are identified as standing in a strategic position to generate much-needed liberating and prophetic vision. The essay is addressed to trustees who would take the risks of leadership to move the seminary from where it is to the greater place it might be.

Essay originally written in 1980 as a summary of reflections on Greenleaf's experience in writing and responding to reactions to his series of essays on the servant theme. Special emphasis in this publication is on Institutes of Chairing as the best available means to begin a movement by institutions toward a level of performance as servant.

Originally written in 1975 as the fourth in his original series, Greenleaf collected these nine essays, plus a postscript, into four categories of institutions: universities, businesses, churches and foundations. Part of a set of 7 chapbooks entitled "A deeper understanding of servant-leadership," volume 2 of a series from the Robert K. Greenleaf Center. Includes index.

The 1991 revision of Greenleaf's seminal 1970 essay. The author discusses the skills necessary to be a servant-leader; the importance of awareness, foresight, and listening; and contrasts between coercive, manipulative, and persuasive power. This essay has been translated into Arabic, Czech, Dutch, French, Japanese, Mandarin Chinese, Portuguese, Russian, Spanish, and Turkish.

Essays and articles written or talks given over 20 years by Greenleaf. The first three chapters are the three essays: The servant as leader: The institution as servant: and Trustees as servants. The rest of the chapters are entitled: Servant leadership in business; Servant leadership in education; Servant leadership in foundations; Servant leadership in churches; Servant leaders: Abraham Joshua Heschel and Donald John Cowling; Servant responsibility in a bureaucratic society; and American and world leadership. The last chapter is an essay around Robert Frost's poem Directive, written in tribute to the poet after his death in 1963. Includes information about the Robert K. Greenleaf Center. Includes index.

Collection of essays by Greenleaf organized around the themes of power, management, organizations and ethics. The first part includes an unpublished book manuscript which Greenleaf had entitled The Ethic of Strength. The second part essays explore how to exercise power without violating the rights of others. Part three consists of "the Dartmouth Lectures" on Leadership and the Individual which were given prior to the 1970 publication of The Servant as Leader. The last part is an interview with Greenleaf by Joseph DiStefano. Foreword by Peter Drucker.

Gathers together Greenleaf's major unpublished writings on issues involving faith, spirit, theology and religious institutions. Even though these essays are spiritual in focus and emphasize religious institutions, the ideas they raise are applicable to people in all types of institutions. Foreword by Parker Palmer.

Originally written in 1982, this essay is written from the perspective of organization (i.e., how things get done) and addresses the phenomenon of "spirit" on which all leadership is dependent yet almost impossible to codify or encapsulate.

A collection of Greenleaf's final writings on servant-leadership. Brings together eight late essays on the subject which reflect his evolving insights into the ideas and practices which make up servant-leadership while several focus on related issues of spirit (Old Age: the Ultimate Test of Spirit), commitment of vision (Have You a Dream Deferred?), and seeing things whole (My Debt to E. B. White.). Foreword by Peter Vaill. Afterword by James P. Shannon.

Essays and articles written or talks given over 20 years by Greenleaf. With a foreword by Steven R. Covey and afterword by Peter M. Senge. The first three chapters are the three essays: The servant as leader: The institution as servant: and Trustees as servants. The rest of the chapters are entitled: Servant leadership in business; Servant leadership in education; Servant leadership in foundations; Servant leadership in churches; Servant leaders: Abraham Joshua Heschel and Donald John Cowling; Servant responsibility in a bureaucratic society; and American and world leadership. A revision of the 1974 essay which addresses the needs of senior executives for sustained, caring (but demanding) assistance from able trustees. Addresses the ambiguity of the trustee role and offers ideas on how each trustee group can claim its rightful functions. A general view of all governing boards of institutions, profit or not for profit.

Includes the original 1970 version of The Servant as Leader as well as Teacher as Leader and another essay, Life's Choices and Markers. Also contains additional commentary on those writings by Greenleaf for use by those interested in the teaching and practice of servant-leadership. Foreword by Hamilton Beazley and an introduction essay on Understanding the Growing Impact of Servant-Leadership by Larry Spears. Includes Greenleaf bibliography and index.

A later revision of the 1974 essay which addresses the needs of senior executives for sustained, caring (but demanding) assistance from able trustees. Addresses the ambiguity of the trustee role and offers ideas on how each trustee group can claim its rightful functions. A general view of all governing boards of institutions, profit or not for profit. Third in a series of essays on the role of servant.

Along with Abraham Joshua Heschel: build a life like a work of art; On being a seeker in the late twentieth century, Greenleaf reflects on 84 years of living, working, thinking and learning that weaves a definition of spirit as the driving force behind the motive to serve. Part of a set of 7 chapbooks entitled "A deeper understanding of servant-leadership," volume 2 of a series from the Robert K. Greenleaf Center.

Bound with CommonStrength: Building leaders, transforming recovery / Tom Hill. A compilation of a series of six monthly articles written by Greenleaf for the A.A. Grapevine in 1966. Greenleaf’s experiences with his mother’s alcoholism shaped his awareness of the fundamental problems that disease causes in families and family relationships. These six articles are collected together into this essay for the first time.

The 2008 revised printing of the 1991 revision of Greenleaf’s seminal 1970 essay. The author discusses the skills necessary to be a servant-leader; the importance of awareness, foresight, and listening; and contrasts between coercive, manipulative, and persuasive power. This essay has been translated into Arabic, Czech, Dutch, French, Japanese, Mandarin Chinese, Portuguese, Russian, Spanish, and Turkish. This revision includes a section of "Questions for Reflection and Discussion."

A revised reprint of the original 1972 publication. Section headings and a section with questions for reflection and discussion have been added.

Greenleaf summarizes his reflections on servant leadership during the 10 years after his seminal 1970 essay. Preface by Dr. Robert N. Thomas.

A spiritually-based value system treats others with dignity, respect and love; views human equality as a context for ethical behavior; realizes that everything is interdependent and interconnected; and views organizations, communities, countries and world as one. The original essay on which the later publications are based. The author defines an empowered employee as an individual who is highly competent, self-managed and continuously learning, Service in the workplace comes from an unconditional commitment to customers and a willingness to learn continually to exceed their changing expectations.

The author defines a living organization as one that "adapts to accelerated change by continual recreation." This volume focuses on an integration of holistic principles, practices and behaviors that encourage the full expression of body, mind, and spirit. There are five key elements in this process: people, service, organizational self awareness, wisdom and the new leadership. New leadership is vision-driven, learning driven, and values driven. It is important to get the right leaders on your team to ensure that your team is functioning efficiently and effectively. I will cover the leader competencies that are important to the team. Leader attributes are also determining factors for choosing subordinate leaders for the team. My project will also address the servant leader qualities and how a servant leader will benefit the team. Toxic leaders have an impact on the team. I will address how to avoid toxic leaders and how to deal with toxic leaders who are already on the team. Having a great team not only improves performance, but also makes people want to come to work. Includes Biographical references (p. 18-20)

The author reveals why the keys to organizational success -- learning, loving, leading -- are frequently overlooked. Includes bibliographical references.

The author, a former Citicorp executive and one-time captain in the Marine Corps, offers a convincing case for the importance of having a second vocation in life as a means to stay passionate. He offers a set of "20 keys to a double life" that anyone can use such as "learn from failure," "reinvent yourself," and "listen to your heart." Includes bibliographical references and index.

The authors offer a powerful model which suggests that "dynamic duos" as executive co-leaders in organizations mark an important trend toward collaborative leadership. The co-authors provide fascinating case studies in support of their contention, among them: Microsoft's Bill Gates and Steve Ballmer; University of North Carolina's basketball coaches Dean Smith and Bill Guthridge, an others. Includes bibliographical references and index.

This book provides leaders the means to enhance performance and profit by offering to pay their employees the non-monetary currencies of the "Hidden Paycheck." Much of the old loyalty employees once had for their companies gone. Years of downsizing, mergers and other cost-cutting strategies have left employees feeling they are holding the short end of the stick in their relationships with their employers. Most companies have forgotten the most basic and fundamental rule in human relationships - "people give to get." If you manage or lead people - even if it's just one person - then you must realize that to get the performance and profit you want from your employees, you must be willing to give them what they really want and it's not just about money. The author brings into this book his many years of business experience as well as his process of inquiry in order to model a theory that is both intuitive and practical. The parts of this model are: investigation; hypothesis; action; belief; and reading the signs. The result is the ability to see "what's really going on." Foreword by Robert N. Bellah. Includes bibliography and index.

The authors look at a selection of CEOs, some of whom are servant-leaders, and examine the characteristics that describe the best leaders. Through the interviews they conducted during their research, the authors identified 10 characteristics: passion; intelligence and clarity of thinking; great communications skills; high energy level; egos in check; inner peace; capitalizing on formative early life experiences; positive attitude; and focus on "doing the right things right." Includes index.

The author organizes this book into four sections, corresponding to the four seasons of the year expounding that like the life cycle of the earth, leaders need a season in which to understand who they are; why they are here; what they are doing; and how they can make a difference in the world. These learning times explore self-introspection; creating a mission statement and setting goals; learning from mistakes; formal education; taking risks; building a balanced life; and exploring leadership and life skills. Each chapter is introduced by a quote from a philosopher, historical figure and leader, several of whom are servant-leaders such as Greenleaf, Palmer and Spears.

The author discusses storytelling as a powerful form of human communication and one that is used to pass on the culture. References several servant leadership writers including Greenleaf. Includes bibliographical references and index.

The author identifies several big issues in making the workplace better and more successful: the need to make them more fulfilling with more dignity and meaning for everyone; the growing power of global corporations; the growing gap between rich and poor, people and nations; ecological threats by our current ways of doing business; the need for opportunity for a fulfilling and healthy life; the need to enjoy and value differences; the need to bring balance into work and life. To address these issues, the author uses the Strategic Leadership Model as a structure for the book. He references Greenleaf and the Chronicles the life of the author who encourages the reader to face everyday life, work and relationships with a spirit of adventure. He explores the truths that give life both substance and song and satisfaction along with success. He defines an adventure as any intentional experience that substantially alters one's perspective long enough to see things in a new way. He refers to Greenleaf in his discussion about loyalty in the chapter on creating a generous reality. Includes bibliography and index.

Author is grateful to Tom Chappell, J. Robert Ouimet, Max De Pree, C. William Pollard, Dennis Bakke, and above all Robert Greenleaf who have struggled, each in their own way, against the grain of secular culture to create business organizations that are exemplary cultures.

The author addresses concepts from business management, organizational development, anthropology, biological science cosmology, psychology, quantum physics, sociology, human consciousness and various schools of spiritual practice. Notes and bibliography (p. 111-124).

Through the work of Greenleaf, the author has developed a coaching model of 7 principles, confirming, correcting, caring, coaching, collaborating, conciliating, and clarifying. He elaborates on those principles in three parts: the power of reinforcement; the power of relationships; and the power of information, all in the context of working safely but could be used in any organizational setting. Foreword by E. Scott Geller.

The authors aspired to model the Greenleaf principles of servant-leadership in their own leadership. In two parts the book explores issues such as: essential ingredients of every great HR career; corporate goals through promoting HR values; reducing policies; powerful relationships; trust your own judgment; and be the best employer for the right reasons, not for the PR. Includes bibliography and index.

This author describes a vision that takes human needs and values into account and outlines the creation of work and organizational structures that understand and foster those needs and values. Includes bibliographical references.

The author describes what it means to "be called," i.e., what it means to live a life that uses one's talents and adds lasting value to the world. In the three parts of the book, he explains how to hear one's call and what to do about it when it happens. The three parts of the book are: Getting started with a calling; Breathing depth into common calls; and Keeping focus for the long term. Each part is summarized and there is an appendix with the questions that the author asked of his interviewees regarding their callings. Includes bibliographical references and index.

This book provides detailed, step-by-step exercises for discussing common values such as truth, forgiveness, and integrity. The authors use stories to encourage a better understanding of central values, with a goal of elevating our understanding of "ethical literacy."

A review of traditional leadership theories contrasted with servant-leadership. The premise is that the old command and control model is dead and the search for a new model has begun. The author shows modern leadership approaches as molded by the servant-first style of Jesus and develops a practical leadership model based on a careful study of the teaching and practice of Jesus. That style puts the needs of followers above those of the leader, promotes teamwork, individual dignity and worth, and results in a synergy of purpose unachievable with the old leadership models. Its application today creates an environment in which people freely choose to create, innovate, and strive for excellence. Two chapters on Greenleaf's servant leadership. Includes bibliographical reference.

Takes a practical look at such topics as bringing love and spirituality into work, and changing your organization through transformative servant-leadership. Uses illustrations from cinematic, athletic, political, and spiritual arenas.

Foreword by Robert A. Johnson. Includes bibliographical references and index.

In three groups, the forerunners, the negotiators and the provocateurs, she profiles 6 outstanding African American leaders who devoted their lives to service and to the legacy of servant-leadership for the future generations of leaders. Includes bibliographical references, bibliography and index.

The author writes from the belief that everything that is changing led to the disasters of the dotcom era. This book reminds us that some fundamental rules do still apply by taking readers through 20 imperatives derived from the thinking of great leaders and management theorists including Peter Drucker, Henry Fayol, Andrew Grove and bankers and financiers such as Thomas Gresham and Warren Buffet. This entertaining rundown of the fundamental laws, rules and principles business professionals should break at their peril is complemented by case studies that document the consequences of ignoring these key laws.

Relates how the author's four "movers and shakers" mentors influenced his education in leadership and demonstrated servant-leadership in action. Foreword by Dick Goode and Bob Whalen.
