Sumalayo Jackson takes new role in President's Office

Sumalayo Jackson will become assistant to the president for human relations at Indiana State University, President Deborah J. Curtis announced.

"Indiana State needs to develop stronger partnerships with local groups serving underrepresented populations," Curtis said. "This role will help develop and grow those relationships as we work together to improve our community and address social justice issues. I am pleased to have Sumalayo serving in this role."

Jackson will report directly to Curtis and her role will include serving on the President's cabinet. The position is the revamping of an existing salary line within the communication function of the President's office and does not require allocation of any new money.
