HR executive director takes job at Governors State

Richard Enyard, Ph.D., Indiana State University's Executive Director of Human Resources, has accepted an offer to become the first Vice President for Human Resources at Governors State University (GSU), a doctoral degree granting institution in the south suburbs of Chicago.

Enyard, who holds a doctorate in higher education administration from the University of Missouri – Columbia, has been working in his current position at ISU for two and a half years. He has more than 20 years of HR experience and leadership roles in higher education.

"I enjoyed my time at ISU," Enyard said. "This is a good place to work. I wish we would have accomplished more, but HR has accomplished some good things and will continue to do good things in the future. I will miss the HR team and the campus community. I wish everyone well.”

Enyard’s last day at ISU is Oct. 9. Tami Weinzapfel-Smith, Employee Relations and Immigration Director, will serve as Interim Director of Human Resources following his departure.

“Rick has been a great colleague and source of counsel,” said Senior Vice President for Finance and Administration Diann McKee. “He shared clear-eyed advice and always strived to be objective and fair to all concerned in the sensitive area of employment. I will miss his experienced and wise perspective as he takes on new responsibilities elsewhere.”
