Statement from ISU President Dr. Deborah J. Curtis on the Chauvin verdict

Today justice was served. The jury verdict in Minnesota has reverberated throughout society, and certainly on the campus of Indiana State University, where members of our community are tuned in and caring about the world around them. This is an emotionally charged moment, coming near the end of a challenging academic year. Your Sycamore Family is here for each of you, and we will strive to support one another.

There will be an event to discuss the verdict at 6 p.m. tonight, Tuesday, April 20, at Dede II and III at the Hulman Memorial Student Union.

We take to heart our mission to educate students and equip them with the ability to think critically and make a difference in their professions and communities. Soon, our new graduates will go out into a society that doesn't always live up to its stated values. In those situations, and others, Sycamores try to heal fractures — as thinkers, as doers, and as family.
