Alum's gift funds communication scholarship

Bill Zlatos, a 1972 Indiana State University graduate from Pittsburgh, didn't realize he needed to pay his remaining tuition balance before registering for his second semester of classes at ISU. He held up the line at the registration table as he frantically called his parents, who dipped into their savings to lend him the necessary funds.

Now a self-described "semi-retired reporter," Zlatos is supporting students in similar financial situations through giving. The William "Bill" Zlatos Scholarship in Communication allows Indiana State journalism students with financial need to find their voice through their studies.

"I didn't know anything about going to college," Zlatos said. "I'm the oldest kid of four, and I didn't get really any help from high school. There are a lot of kids who just don't know anything about what it's like to go to college, and I wanted to help them so that they would have something and wouldn't have to go through what I did."

Zlatos's commitment to support the scholarship includes a pledge of $25,000 and a contribution from his estate. MORE
