

Journal of Theoretical and Philosophical Criminology
2010, Vol 2 (1)

I would like to welcome our readers to year two of the Journal of Theoretical and Philosophical Criminology. Over the course of the last twelve months I have received a variety of positive feedback from scholars both in the States and overseas. Readership over this same period has shown a steady increase indicating that jtpcrim is beginning to carve out a small intellectual niche that we anticipate will continue to grow. We encourage you to share this site with colleagues and students who may find some kinship with the work presented in these pages.

We have begun to receive a variety of unsolicited manuscripts for possible publication and anticipate that this trend will also continue. Though the vast majority of articles published in jtpcrim remain solicited pieces it is my hope that this will soon change.

I would like to end by thanking all those individuals who have helped to make this publication a success. Whether it is readers or those publishing their work, I am very thankful for your support and hope you will enjoy the newest edition of our journal. Please send any comments to david.polizzi@indstate.edu.

David Polizzi, Editor-in-Chief
Journal of Theoretical and Philosophical Criminology